

“Chat and Chew” on Careers

SOCIOLOGIST

Sociologists research human behavior and the relationships between groups. These social scientists offer insights to help society understand the various ways the individuals and groups make decisions and respond to change.

Through their studies and analysis, a variety of social, personal, governmental and environmental problems are explored and solved.

There are various occupational fields that sociologists may desire to specialize within. Career fields such as population studies, crime and delinquency as well as, politics and urban planning are just a few. This career field requires a bachelor’s degree to get entry level jobs. However, a PhD is required for most positions.
